My dear son!

As you mentioned in your last letter that you have customers for Hungarian stamps, I am sending you two new copies in this envelope. As you can see from these, they were put into circulation by the post office at a considerable surcharge. However, even so, only in such small quantities that I had to obtain the stamps from a dealer at a further extra charge. Since I spent so much on them, I will even pay the offer fee to make sure you receive your parcel intact. I note that the stamps with the 1 pence surcharge, together with their frames, were issued in blocks of 1, while the other stamps were issued in the usual regular sheets - it is said that in the near future, new flood stamps with a small surcharge will be issued in a complete series. I will of course send you some of these as well. Kisses, Dad
